A few words about me

My name is Sergio and I come from Cali, Colombia, a city known for its vibrant culture, music and warm people. I am a professional saxophonist and music educator who will begin a Master's degree at the Royal Conservatory of Brussels.

I consider myself a responsible, kind and open-minded person. During my university years I shared housing with other people, which taught me how to adapt to different lifestyles, respect shared spaces and live harmoniously with others.

Living together

I am fully independent and comfortable managing daily responsibilities such as cooking, cleaning, organizing my schedule and using public transportation.

I enjoy family life, meaningful conversations and learning from different generations. I especially value listening to people's stories and experiences.

I understand that every family has its own way of living, and I enjoy adapting to new environments while being respectful of family traditions and personal space.

Cultural Exchange

One of the things I look forward to most is becoming part of everyday Belgian life. I hope to improve my French, learn about local traditions and experience Belgian culture from within a family environment.

At the same time, I would be happy to share Colombian culture, traditions, music, language and food with my host family.

Food and daily life

I do not have allergies, dietary restrictions or special food requirements.

I enjoy discovering new foods and learning about local traditions through everyday family life.

For me, sharing meals, conversations and daily routines is one of the most meaningful ways to experience another culture.

Why I would love to join a host family

My goal is not simply to study in Belgium, but to become part of a cultural exchange experience that is meaningful for everyone involved.

I hope to contribute positively to family life, share my culture, learn from yours, and create memories and friendships that will last long after my studies are completed.

A Final Thought

For me, a host family is not simply accommodation. It is an opportunity to build genuine connections, learn from one another and create lasting memories together.
